

The Winter Solstice is past and the new year begins, each day bringing more light into our lives.

1992 - A Summary

Happy New Year! These cards are a bit late this year, due to an incredibly hectic fall semester at school. Anyway, the past year had good and bad moments, and on the whole I am ready to start another year.

In school, I finished the courses for my minor, so I no longer have any classes to take, and can concentrate on research. The next step toward a Ph.D. is a thesis proposal, which I hope to complete early in 1993. This past March saw my first journal publication (as a coauthor), and December saw another. I also recently submitted the first paper based primarily on my own work.

I spent the summer working at a research lab in Princeton, learning that not only are there nice places in New Jersey, but some beautiful horse country as well!

Roy had a rather unlucky year, starting with a ligament injury in January, and continuing with another pulled ligament (in a different leg), some torn muscles from being kicked by another horse, and finishing in November with a twisted small intestine (which required surgery and a week in the hospital, for which the still visible square patch of hair on his neck was shaved to put in an IV catheter). His recovery has been going well, however, and he remains in good spirits. Hopefully all the time off due to the surgery will allow Roy's ligaments to fully recover!

My address remains the same: 1220 Drake Street, Madison,

Happy New Year!
